The Bellevus staff of patholarists decided to-day that Martin Brodsky, of Riverhead, who demanded admission to the bospital last night, claiming that he, too, had been infected with anthrax germs, is suffering from a plain case of a boil on the back of the neck. Brodsky will return to Riverhead greatly relieved. physically and mentally.

As for Judge Stackpole, he is not out of danger, although his temperature is steadily diminishing and his heart action shows improvement. No more serum will be administered as blood tests show that the anthrax germs have been routed.

Anthrax has been for many years common disease among cattle and sheep and human beings in Europe, particularly in Russia and France It is most common there in external or cutaneous form, and French scien tists have demonstrated that it can be avoided in animals and humans by vaccination. The disease has been known to medical practitioners for hundreds of years and to scientific investigators of disease for more than haif a century.

The bacillus of anthrax was the first germ discovered by microscopical examination of the blood, and the discovery opened the door for nearly all modern progress in bacteriology.
